IPL Therapy (Intense Pulsed Light)

Intense Pulsed Light therapy, commonly known as IPL, is used to perform skin treatments for aesthetic and therapeutic purposes. During the treatment, a handheld device is passed across the skin's surface delivering pulses of broad-spectrum light to the deep layers of the skin. Think of it as a powerful blinking flashlight sending out scattered wavelengths of light, making an IPL a skin treatment that is very targeted for specific problem areas or skin concerns. This treatment is sometimes referred to as a "photofacial."

Laser Hair Removal (LHR)

Laser hair removal is a popular option for people who want a more permanent solution for facial hair, body hair, stubble, and ingrown hairs. Laser hair removal uses laser energy to prevent a person's hair follicles from growing new hairs.

During a laser hair removal treatment, bright flashes of laser light are emitted on to the patient's skin. The light penetrates through the patient's epidermis, is absorbed by the pigment (melanin) in the hair, and destroys hair follicles in the active growing phase, permanently preventing any future growth.

miraDry

The miraDry treatment is a procedure that can be performed in as little as one hour. The miraDry system uses thermal energy that targets and destroys the sweat glands, odor glands, and hair follicles in your underarm. Once those glands are eliminated, they do not grow back.

RHA Filler

Your skin naturally contains hyaluronic acid (HA), which provides moisture, volume, and structure that help it appear smooth and refreshed. Your skin produces less HA over time as we age. The RHA Collection uses a gentle manufacturing process to help preserve the natural structure of HA—allowing it to more closely resemble the HA in your skin—for clean beauty.

Daxxify
